

Talking about Money in Your Family

What You'll Learn

1. Identify how you learn about money from your parents and grandparents.
2. Name emotions that can arise when people talk about money.
3. Identify how often you should talk about money.

Talk about It

Ask your children:

- What are you learning from me about using your money well?
- What money-related topics are easy to talk about with me?
- What money-related topics are more difficult to talk about with me?

Do It

- Talk with your grandparents or other older family adults about how they used money as a child.
- With your parents, list emotions that make it easy to talk about money.
- With your parents, discuss an instance when communication about money broke down. What happened? What steps can you take if this starts to happen again?

My Notes:

Visit www.bankit.com for more information on making positive money choices.